“Technology Upgrading of Eastern Europe: Past and Present”

The presentation aims to test my approach in the ‘Grand Synthesis’ & ‘Work in Progress’ book. The point of departure is that innovation is not only techno-economic but also social and political processes. By taking this neo-Schumpeterian perspective, I address four issues. First, East European transition, post-transition, the innovative enterprise and the industry landscape. Second, building innovation systems or (mis)alignment of different parts of the national innovation systems. Third, key alignment for catching up: EE/fSU between foreign and domestic-led modernization. Fourth, the evolution of meanings of ‘transition’ and lessons. The argument builds on my 2022 Research Policy paper and subsequent research.
